Ethics Breakfast Briefing: EIANZ Code of Ethics and Professional Practice (2012)

Have you ever been challenged by the decisions that you make as an environmental practitioner? What has challenged you – the values associated with the decision, the knowledge that you brought to the decision, or the skills that you applied in its making?

All members of the EIANZ make a commitment to follow the EIANZ Code of Ethics and Professional Conduct in their professional activities.

There are increasing expectations that environmental practitioners will be accountable for the work that they produce, that they will be members of a professional association that holds them accountable for making decisions ethically and conducting themselves in a principled manner. The EIANZ Code of Ethics and Professional Conduct is the framework that is used to hold EIANZ members accountable.

Do you know and understand the expectations that you have signed up for as a member of the EIANZ? Join us for breakfast and hear why ethics are a key part of your identity and standing as an environmental practitioner and as a professional.

Morning Event 9.30am – 12.30pm

Professional Development Workshop – Environmental Ethics

Considering becoming a CEnvP now or in the future? Are you someone that makes decisions, big or small, in your environmental practice? If the answer is yes, this workshop is a must.

A few hours of your time invested in this workshop will help prepare you for the interest that the CEnvP Board will have in your understanding of the application of ethical principles in environmental decision making.

The workshop will inform you about the basis of ethical thinking, the EIANZ Code of Ethics and Professional Conduct, ethics and the public and private sectors, ethics and the law, and give you an opportunity to practice your skills in ethical decision making. Led by experienced environmental and legal practitioners, the workshop will equip you with skills to think through and resolve environmental problems in an ethical and principled manner.

Attendance at this workshop will provide you with an insight into and understanding of a key tool in your professional tool kit as an environmental practitioner.
