The Australian Government has announced a One-Stop Shop for environmental approvals policy that will accredit state planning systems under national environmental law, to create a single environmental assessment and approval process for nationally protected matters. The One-Stop Shop policy aims to simplify the approvals process for businesses, lead to swifter decisions and improve Australia's investment climate, while maintaining high environmental standards.

The framework for implementation includes a three-stage process with each of the willing jurisdictions, comprising:

1. signing a Memorandum of Understanding
2. agreement on bilateral assessments and updating any existing agreement with the states and territories
3. negotiation of approval bilateral agreements

The question on everyone's lips is "how will it actually work"? Come to the EIANZ SEQ inaugural webinar to find out where the implementation process is at and what it is likely to look like when it's rolled out. What will this mean for you as an Environmental Practitioner?

The One-Stop Shop for environmental approvals is expected to result in regulatory savings to business of around $426 million a year, by reducing costs associated with delays to project approvals and administration.

The Department of the Environment has prepared the Regulatory Cost Savings under the One-Stop Shop for Environmental Approvals to explain the method for calculating estimated cost savings for business from the One-Stop Shop. It also provides a summary of the One-Stop Shop for environmental approvals in Australia and changes to the current regulatory environment.

How does the Webinar work? Once you've registered, you'll be emailed a unique access code and a web address. Just log onto the address when the event is ready to start. All you need is a computer with speaker and an internet connection! You can even type questions for the presenter in real time!
